SPECIAL FUND PROJECT "HYDROMETEOROLOGICAL SURVEY OF THE CATCHMENTS OF LAKES VICTORIA, KYOGA AND ALBERT"

The objectives of the project are to assist the governments in the collection and analysis of hydrometeorological data on the catchments of Lakes Victoria, Kyoga and Albert in order to study the water balance of the Upper-Nile, as a basis for planning water conservation and development, and laying the basis for inter-governmental co-operation in the regulation of the Nile. The participating governments are: Kenya, Sudan, Uganda, the United Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The project will undertake the following specific tasks:

(a) the establishment of additional data collecting stations (hydrometeorological, rainfall and hydrological stations to record lake levels) and the upgrading of some of the existing stations; in order to complete an adequate network from which basic hydrometeorological data can be collected and analysed;

(b) the establishment of seven small index-catchments for intensive studies of rainfall-runoff relationships for application to other parts of the catchment area;

(c) aerial and topographical surveys and mapping; including a hydrographical survey of Lake Kyoga;

(d) to devise and propose analytical procedures for the various parameters involved in the water balance of the lakes using the data collected from the new and existing stations, and from the index-catchments; and

(e) the training of staff of the participating governments in hydrometeorological work.

The Special Fund will contribute to the project, over a period of five years, the services of experts and consultants totalling thirty-nine man-years in hydrology; hydrometeorology and related fields. Fifteen man-years of fellowships will be awarded to counterpart personnel. In addition, the Special Fund will provide meteorological and hydrological instruments and accessories, laboratory equipment, communication, camping and special office equipment, and vehicles for land and water transport. #### COLOMBIAN METEOROLOGICAL AND HYDROLOGICAL SERVICE

The objective of the project, which will be executed in five years, is to create a Colombian Meteorological and Hydrological Service through consolidation and improvement of existing services and facilities which at present are spread among several governmental and private organizations, and through the addition of new facilities and application of advanced techniques. Improved and standardized procedures will gradually be introduced for the systematic collection and reporting of data from existing stations which will be rehabilitated and provided with new equipment where appropriate. The network will be expanded by establishing about 250 additional meteorological, 320 hydrological stations, and more than 1,000 precipitation stations.

Ten field offices will be set up to conduct hydrometric observations and to supervise the functioning of the existing and newly established meteorological and hydrological stations. The data collected will be transmitted to the headquarters of the new Service for processing, analysis and publication. Laboratory and workshop facilities for the calibration, maintenance and repair of observation equipment, and for sedimentation testing will also be created.

During the course of the project, staff will be trained in modern methods of data collection and processing, and in the operation and maintenance of the new installations. Training of professional staff for the new Service will be carried out by fellowships abroad and by in-service training by the international experts.

The ultimate aim of the project is to provide Colombia with adequate meteorological and hydrological data for the planning of future economic development projects particularly the development of water resources and hydroelectricity.

The Special Fund through the Executing Agency (World Meteorological Organization) will provide a Project Manager and four other experts (total of 21 man-years), twelve one-year fellowships and equipment for US $531,300.

The following activities will be carried out as part of the project :

(a) training of class IV, III and II meteorological personnel.—The existing School of the Meteorological Service, which trains class IV and Class III personnel, will be incorporated in the project. The training of class II meteorologists, in collaboration with the University of Algiers, will be added ;

(b) training of class I meteorological personnel.—The training of class I meteorological personnel will be carried out by post-graduate specialization in one of the following subjects :

meteorological observations and instruments, general and synoptic meteorology (the exchange and processing of data), and applications to agriculture and hydrology ;

(c) training of specialists.—Specialists will be trained in the following subjects :

meteorological instruments, synoptic meteorology, agrometeorology, and hydrometeorology ;

(d) research and its application.—With a view to the study of the specific hydrometeorological and climatological problems of arid and semi-arid areas, the project will have access to two research and applied research stations at Tamanrasset and Colomb Béchar.

In addition to the Project Manager, four instructors will be recruited internationally. Provision is also made for consultant services. Study fellowships will be granted to counterpart instructors.

DEVELOPMENT AND IMPROVEMENT OF
METEOROLOGICAL AND HYDROLOGICAL
SERVICES IN BOLIVIA

The purpose of the project is to assist the Government in its meteorological and hydrological observation networks and in the establishment of an adequate central service to assemble, process and disseminate the information thus obtained.

Reliable meteorological and hydrological information is essential for the development of many important projects and activities in Bolivia in sectors influenced by climate and water resources such as agriculture, hydro-electric power production, transportation and colonization. Sufficient information cannot be provided by the existing systems which include only 35 synoptic, 92 thermopluviol, 347 pluviometric and one radio sounding station in the meteorological network and only 63 inadequately installed hydrological stations. In addition, all these stations are grouped in small areas, leaving entire regions practically without observations; moreover, they are managed by different ministries and organizations.

The Government, as a first step to improve this situation, has officially established the Meteorological and Hydrological National Service as a centralized organization with authority for technical and administrative matters in the entire country and for establishing relations with foreign specialized organizations. A plan for extending and improving these services has been formulated by the Bolivian Development Corporation and the Ministry of Planning and the Government requested assistance from the UNDP (Special Fund) for carrying out this plan.

The project activities will cover the initial stage of a programme for the development of the meteorological and hydrological services, from which the following benefits are expected:

(a) To provide data and information on climate conditions and hydraulic resources in certain regions of the country in which there are no systematic observations ;

(b) To improve and extend the meteorological and hydrological information in those areas of the country where some data have already been obtained ;

(c) To build up, initially, the network in the Upper Amazon River Basin, which is required for proposed development programmes in that region ;

(d) To provide the Government agencies, private enterprises and individuals with the information needed for agricultural transportation and other current activities including all land and water resources development projects ;

(e) To allow the Government to participate, with reliable data and information, in the international enterprises for the development of the Amazon and La Plata River Basins and to provide meaningful co-operation with the objectives of the International Hydrological Decade programmes.

During the course of the project, staff will be trained in modern methods of data collection and processing, and in the operation and maintenance of the new installations. Training of professional staff for the new Service will be carried out by fellowships abroad and by in-service training by the international experts.

The ultimate aim of the project is to provide Bolivia with adequate meteorological and hydrological data for the planning of future economic development projects particularly the development of water resources and hydroelectricity.

The Special Fund through the Executing Agency (World Meteorological Organization) will provide a Project Manager and three other experts (total of 7½ man-years), 11 fellowships of a total of 13 man-years, and equivalent to the value of US $348,200.

Depending upon the result achieved at the end of the project a second stage of the project will be considered.

The fifth session (October 1969) of the WMO Regional Association for Africa considered that arrangements should be made for the planning and co-ordination of networks over the continent as a whole and for the provision of expert advice and assistance to individual countries in assessing their needs and formulating projects on a more continuous basis than at present.

The purpose of the mission is to invite the attention to the importance of planning activities in the field of hydrometeorological networks for the whole African continent and to assist in this planning. It is expected that as a result countries will be more fully aware of how to develop and utilize their water resources.
