To ensure that the Service is in a position to fulfil its responsibilities in these fields, the existing observation network, which consists of twelve synoptic stations, twenty-two stations equipped for agrometeorological data collection, 107 with climatological and 497 with pluviometric equipment, will have to be expanded ; equipment will have to be updated and supplemented ; hydrometeorological equipment which was destroyed in recent floods must be replaced and continuous seismological observation will have to be instituted.

By providing the means for improving the quality and quantity of data obtained and assuring its distribution to Government agencies, private enterprises and individuals which require it, this project is expected to result in :

- (a) Better planning and execution of agricultural and water resources development projects ;
- (b) Selection of regions and seasons most appropriate for the expansion of tourism ;
- (c) Progress in solving the special development problems posed by the desertic southern region and the gradual spread of the desert into the central zone ;
- (d) Improved fishing, particularly in the Sousse region ; and
- (e) Reduction of loss of life, property and crops caused by floods, earthquakes and hailstorms.

SPECIAL FUND PROJECT

"METEOROLOGICAL INSTITUTE FOR RESEARCH AND TRAINING" IN CAIRO

The objective of the first phase of the project was the establishment of an Institute for basic and applied research in meteorology as well as training of all categories of meteorological personnel for the needs of the Meteorological Department of the United Arab Republic.

The project started in March 1965 and ended in March 1970. At the request of the Government, the UNDP has approved a second phase, during which it is expected that the research activities initiated during the first phase will be adequately developed, since during the first phase a sufficient number of scientific personnel were trained and an electronic computer for meteorological research work will be made available.

During the first three years of Phase I the emphasis was put on training meteorological personnel needed by the Department of Meteorology and by the Institute. A total of 50 students completed successfully the advanced forecasting course, 65 completed the professional forecasting course and 190 completed their training at the end of Phase I. The research programme started at the beginning of the project but it was only during the last two years of the Phase I that considerable progress was achieved in this activity, especially in agrometeorology and the dynamic aspects of the inter-tropical convergence zone over Africa.

Several scientific seminars were held throughout the Phase I, contributing to increasing the scientific knowledge of the staff of the Institute and to maintaining the enthusiasm in the research activities being carried out at the Institute.

During the Phase II the Institute will be organized in the following seven sections:

- (1) Numerical Weather Prediction.
- (2) Scientific and Climatological (Statistical) Research.
- (3) Agrometeorology and Micrometeorology.
- (4) Radiation (National Radiation Centre).
- (5) Special Investigations.
- (6) Training.
- (7) Scientific Publications.

Although the main emphasis of the activities during the Phase II will be research in the various fields mentioned above, the training of meteorological personnel will continue in order to meet the increasing needs of the Meteorological Department of the United Arab Republic.
