Background information.—In the current Indonesian five-year plan for economic and social development, which began in 1969, the provision of skilled manpower to support the planned increase of industrial development is a basic manpower policy.

There is still a lack of trained skill workers and the developing industrial infrastructure requires technical school graduates, trained in practical skills as well as in related theory.

The present number of the senior technical graduates in Indonesia is still not sufficient mostly because of lack of facilities and qualified technical teachers' staff.

To fill this gap, it is proposed to provide skill up-grading for 330 teachers from secondary schools to be employed in five vocational training centres planned to be established by the Ministry of Education. These teachers are graduates of formal teacher training institutes and have in most cases a minimum of five years' teaching experience. The Ministry of Education has requested the Ministry of Manpower to organise this training at its vocational and managerial centre in Bandung.

The first intake of 75 teacher/instructors to be covered by the project skill up-grading programme is scheduled for January 1973, and as the Ministry of Education's new vocational training centres will open in 1974, this group must be prepared by the time the first centre becomes operational.

This project will provide practical training for teacher/instructors in the following trade areas; machine shop practice (metal trades), automotive mechanics and electrical.
