ANNEX to MLW/WMO/4

WATER RESOURCES ASSESSMENT OF THE LAKE MALAWI CATCHMENT

The future development of Malawi depends to a large extent on the availability of water for hydro-power, irrigation, domestic and industrial use.

The balance between accretion of water in Lake Malawi and losses by evaporation and outflow is delicate. Various studies on the availability of water have been made in the past but the question as to whether the rising water yield during the preceding decades will be reversed some time in the future, resulting in a recurrence of the drought years of the first decades of the century, has not been resolved.

Previous work has been based on direct measurement of the discharge of the only outflow from the Lake (Shire River) at Liwonde, corrected for changes in lake storage and local inflow between the Southern tip of the lake and Liwonde. The station at Liwonde has been operated since 1948 only. More accurate determination of the different elements of the water balance will permit a better use of rainfall data (which is available for a much longer period than the hydrometric data) in order to construct synthetic series for the streamflow of the Shire River. It is further expected that an intensified study of the elements of the water balance of the Lake will make it possible to identify changes in the time series of each of these elements, either natural or man-made.

The team of officers responsible for implementing the project will consist of a Team Leader (Hydrologist) and the Hydrologist-Computer. Provision exists for a number of fellowships to be awarded to national counterpart personnel. The UNDP will provide instruments and equipment to install hydrological and meteorological stations and two vehicles. The project will have a duration of three years.
