OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Post title (Post No., Project).—AGRICULTURE OFFICER (ASPARAGUS PRODUCTION AND PROCESSING) Establishment of a Pilot Asparagus Industry LES/75/050.

Vacancy Announcement. No.—AGO/AGS/371.

Date issued.—22nd June, 1976.

Closing date.—17th August, 1976.

Duty Station.—Maseru, Lesotho.

Duration.—24 Months.

Starting date.—As soon as possible.

Background.—Asparagus has been identified as a high value cash crop which should be suitable to Lesotho conditions. A UNCDF project for the establishment of 105 acres of asparagus and a canning factory has been approved and is already in operation (LES/74/C23). A further expansion of asparagus area to about 800 acres is envisaged during the country's second five-year development plan period (1974/75—1979/80). Most of the expansion will take place in the Thaba-Bosiu Project Area. Initially it was expected that the services of a UN Volunteer together with consultant advice would be sufficient for the implementation of the Pilot Project. However, in view of the expansion plans, a very qualified and experienced person will be required to be in charge of the Asparagus Unit which has been established within the Thaba-Bosiu Project. The Asparagus Officer and the consultants for Canning Factory design and Export Marketing will be directly responsible to the Project Manager of the Thaba-Bosiu Project.

Duties.—Under the responsibility of the Project Manager of the Thaba-Bosiu Project, the Adviser will be responsible for the planning and development of the asparagus scheme, production, processing, and marketing. He will be assisted by specialists in production, marketing and other necessary specialities. His duties will include :—

(1) Advise on production of asparagus, planting material, selection of growers and their organisation, cultural practices, harvesting, standards of quality and inspection, and delivery to the canning operation.

(2) Management of the processing facility, its design, construction, administration and operation including direction of marketing of products.

(3) Interview and select staff for the scheme and introduce appropriate training programmes.

Qualifications.—University degree in Horticulture.

Experience.—Horticultural Industry based on production by small holders. Desirable, experience in operation of canning factory.

The expert should be an experienced horticulturist; it is particularly important that he has experience in the creation of an agricultural industry based on production by many small-holders, of a high value cash crop for delivery to a central processing plant. An additional desirable qualification would be experience in the operation of a canning factory.

Ideally, the officer should have a background in, for example, the development of tea, as the organisational problems with the asparagus will have much in common with those of smallholders growing tea.

Language.—A very good knowledge of English is essential.

Emoluments.—Salaries and benefits are liberal, commensurate with the responsibilities of the post and in line with the depth and breadth of training and experience.

Candidates may be requested to provide satisfactory evidence of the educational qualifications shown in their applications. Appointments to vacant positions may depend upon the candidate selected providing such evidence for inclusion in his official personal file.

EXPLANATORY NOTES ON THE TERM "MODULES OF EMPLOYABLE SKILL"

Project Code.—IRA/72/024 Post 33-19, 33-20, 33-21.
MEMO ON MODULES OF EMPLOYABLE SKILL

As a basis for greater effectiveness of vocational training.

1. Training problems plaguing developing countries: Critical scrutiny of the manpower situation in most developing countries leads to the conclusion that traditional vocational training systems are not the best answer to meet present or future needs for providing a labour force competent to fill the jobs available or forthcoming. Major divergencies exist between the output of training institutions and the actual requirement of employability. The skills produced are deficient as regards quantity, quality, applicability and level. Existing training systems are generally too rigid to evolve programmes which change as advancing technology applied by employing establishments changes. Traditional apprenticeship programmes are usually too long, often do not directly match actual needs and seldom leave sufficient scope for flexibility. Training opportunities for women are lacking everywhere. Training situations vary within a wide margin and established standards, tests and certification often do not reflect accurately the employability of the people examined.

2. What is needed in practically all developing countries is a vocational training system which is based on the actual requirements of employability and which is dynamic enough to change as employment opportunities change. This can only be done if there is an effective feed-back from the labour market to the training system and if the training system is flexible enough to react quickly to changes in the work requirements.

3. The training concept using modules of employable skill: The underlying idea of the new approach being developed by the ILO is to design training programmes composed of self-contained modular units in the form of standardised training packages incorporating all the teachable elements required for competent work in employment. This approach is different from other modular training systems. While most modular systems are based on units of time the ILO system matches the skills needed for performing a given function with the content of a self-contained modular unit. These modular units, when combined in sets known as "modules of employable skill", can be used to provide training corresponding directly to those functions which constitute actual local occupations.

4. Substantial benefits, in human as well as economic terms, can be derived from such skill-based modular training systems if they are applied to a large number of functions and jobs on a national scale. The worker who learns a module of employable skill will normally acquire employability sooner than if he had followed a traditional training programme, since material not relevant to immediate employment is eliminated. At the same time initial training is less costly as it will be free from unnecessary ballast and focussed on essentials. This will significantly improve the cost-benefit ratio. However, the worker is free to acquire, in due course, further modules in order to reach higher levels of function, or to adapt his skills to changing job requirements or to newly arising job opportunities.

5. Another most beneficial feature of modular training is that it lends itself easily to individualised learning, particularly when self-instructional teaching devices are utilised. It is then possible to make allowance for the absorptive capacity and the learning pace of each individual learner, thus providing a fairer chance to everyone who wishes to acquire occupational qualifications and competence.

6. All in all, the system provides maximum flexibility and universal applicability. It is flexible because modules of employable skill can be different from one country to another and from one training situation to another. However, the components which make up a module of employable skill, i.e. the individual function-based modular units, can be standardised. This means that universally applicable modular units can be prepared centrally with all necessary learning aids and learning progress controls and can then be combined locally to form training programmes fully adapted to the local needs and employment opportunities. Thus, a country which adopts the ILO approach can tailor its training to the immediate economic needs and adjust its training programmes as those needs change so that its labour force can cope more easily, for example, with advancing technology. At the same time it can benefit from contributions to the inventory of prepared standard modular units to be accumulated by the ILO on a world-wide basis.
