SIGNIFICANCE OF SITE

This is a serial nomination of the two sites that are linked to the life and times of Professor Bhekisizwe Joseph Shabalala.

The Ladysmith Black Mambazo House and the Joseph Shabalala gravesite highlight two major dimensions that demonstrate how Joseph Shabalala meandered through social and political conditions of South Africa during the late 20th century, in urban spaces.

While the Ladysmith Black Mambazo House's location in Clermont provides an intriguing demonstration of urban management of African lives in Durban. Clermont itself developed as a freehold space where Africans could purchase properties. However, later in the 1970s, the City of Durban took over its management and used it to build houses for Africans who were temporarily living in the city landscape to serve the needs of the capital labour system. The Ladysmith Black Mambazo House was acquired by Joseph Shabalala in the early 1980s as a safe space for him, his family and for the Ladysmith Black Mambazo group to compose and practice musical performances and recordings. While not all members of the group lived in the house, it was the house that became a centre of interaction of the Ladysmith Black Mambazo.

Shabalala's life was characterised by extraordinary talent and dedication to the values of peace. When he passed on 11 February 2020, his funeral was declared a special funeral and his gravesite has been rehabilitated by the provincial government. The gravesite is a shrine that reminds us about nationhood and how indigenous music can be used as a tool to place South Africa on the global map. Professor Shabalala was a remarkable musician who richly deserves to be celebrated. His legacy needs to be preserved for future generations. When South Africa was undertaking a landmark of democratic transition, Professor Shabalala's music comforted and the kept people of South Africa, including the first democratically elected president Dr Nelson Mandela, going.

Ladysmith Black Mambazo, an Isicathamiya acapella group have, by their unique and powerful African rhythms, and harmonies of local traditional music, which combines (isicathamiya and mbube), been remarkable for decades. Ladysmith Black Mambazo started out singing traditional songs in Zulu but under Shabalala's direction, they created a distinctive and often thrilling harmony style that became massively popular in South Africa in the 1970s and then became a global phenomenon in the 1980s, after they collaborated with Paul Simon on his Graceland project. They have put the area of Ladysmith; KwaZulu-Natal; and the whole of South Africa on the world map.

The Ladysmith Black Mambazo House and the township of Clermont has become the home ground to the many of the groups' hit songs and the numerous Grammy award-winning albums. The Ladysmith Black Mambazo House has been the host to the group's preparation for all their local tournaments, provincial competitions, countrywide tours, and even global performances. The house represents Ladysmith Black Mambazo's commitment, endurance and most importantly, transition, from being just an intimate group of young male choral musicians, mostly from Ladysmith, to being one of the most prominent groups of the distinctive music genre known as Isicathamiya.

The significance of cultural heritage resources like Professor Shabalala's gravesite and the Ladysmith Black Mambazo House can be used to promote social significance and value conditions and influence both management policies and political decisions about specific heritage resources/sites. A heritage declaration of the sites implies acknowledgement of the outstanding significance of the sites, that illuminates authenticity, social significance and pricelessness in cultural heritage.

Shabalala's group had been an inspiration, that even Dr Nelson Mandela publicly declared this group as "South Africa's cultural ambassadors ". The people of South Africa respected Shabalala for his lifelong contribution to the country.

The gravesite of Joseph Shabalala and the Ladysmith Black Mambazo House have a strong association with the life and work of Joseph Shabalala. The house that the potential to yield information that will contribute to an understanding of South Africa's cultural heritage. It is for this reason that the sites, together with the social history associated with them deserves special protection.

SIGNIFICANCE OF SITE

The narrative of South African history has depicted Ndongeni ka Xoki as an obscure, peripheral person whose origin was never clearly outlined. Ndongeni entered the annals of history as a sideline who rode a horse with Dick King on a mission to Grahamstown in 1842, to report that the English had been besieged by the Voortrekkers. During the commemoration of the historical contribution of Dick King, there were plans to depict Ndongeni prominently. This was rejected by the memorial committee and Ndongeni's role was obfuscated. Recent research has unearthed the history of Ndongeni, his role in the Zulu kingdom from the Shakan times until his death in 1948. Ndongeni is among the few persons who witnessed the Zulu kingdom, served under more than six Zulu kings and in each instance, he would play a significant role, either in the warfares, or in nurturing the emerging king. He chose to remain obscure and moved from one place to another. While Ndongeni was among those who saved King Mpande from being killed by Dingane, he was also among the royal regiments who fought in the Battle of Isandlwana. He was also instrumental in the formation of Inkatha in the earlier parts of the twentieth century and would later play a role in the raising funds for the construction of the King Shaka memorial.

Ndongeni is among the few Zulu royals who served different kings and connected different empires. The formal protection of Ndongeni's grave acknowledges his role in the epic journey of 1842, and also enables the people of KwaZulu-Natal to understand the wider contribution he played in South African history for over a century.

The gravesite of Ndongeni has a strong association with the life and work of Ndongeni contributes to an understanding of South Africa's cultural heritage. It is for this reason that the site, together with the social history associated with it deserves special protection.

SIGNIFICANCE OF SITE

Phikamani kaSitheku kaMpande Zulu served the Municipal Native Affairs Department (later the Native Administration Department from its inception in 1916 under John Sydney Marwick, up until the time of the head of the Municipal Department of Bantu Administration, SB Bourquin. His service to the Department thus spanned over 43 years.

Mntwana (prince) Phika was born in December 1878. He was named Phikankani (defiance) because the Zulu were about to defy the British at the Anglo-Zulu War of 1879. He was the son of Sitheku and his grandfather was King Mpande.

At the age of 28 Phika worked for JS Marwick in the Marwick and Morris as an African labourer to the gold mines and collieries.

When John Sydney Marwick was appointed the first manager of the Durban corporation's Natives Affairs Department in 1916 he recommended Phika be appointed Chief Induna of the department to advise him on matters relating to the Zulu, since Phika's royal lineage would add to the credibility of his administration with the labourers in Durban. Phika was a loyal Induna to Marwick.

Phika commanded the respect of people who frequented the Municipal Department of Native Administration. Department officials often consulted Phika about contentious issues and sought his expert opinion on matters; he often knew what people were discontented about in beer halls and the hostels. If he felt the situation required rectification or some discussion, he immediately approached his superiors. Often his concerns were taken seriously by officials administering the department, because, according to Mr. Bourquin, Phika was "the Department's ear on the ground".

As a member of the Zulu Royal family Phika was often asked to represent the King when foreign dignitaries visited. The Native Administration Department appointed Phika to train the Ngoma Dances for the British Royal Family visit to South Africa in 1947.

Phika's often sat on the veranda of the kwaMuhle building consulting with visiting Chiefs and people who came to the Department. Phika died in February 1959 at his home at Olongweni, near Melmoth.

The history of Africans in the twentieth century is largely that of hardship, subjugation, migration and disconnect. The migration of Africans to urban spaces was the last part of the economic project of colonialism. Often the gateway of all Africans in an urban setting was through the Native Affairs Department. This shift was characterised by a traumatic process of dipping, humiliating body exploration / examination publicly and acceptance or rejection. Phika, being a senior member of the royal family, represented the connection of caring and subversion. While he was largely placed within the environment that required him to pacify Africans who were going through the KwaMuhle process, his presence became therapeutic to many Africans. Phika was entangled in many struggles of dispossession whether in the urban or rural landscape. In the 1930s for example, Phika, with AWG Champion, worked together on worker struggles in Durban. Meanwhile, he was working with rural communities to fight cattle curling and land struggles. Phika's stature as a member of the royal family often became a means through which the Zulus remain visible in an area that was considered outside of their geographical influence. Thus, the formal protection of Phika's gravesite enables us to rekindle the role that he played in shaping urban identities in Durban and other spaces.

The gravesite of Phika has a strong association with the life and work of Phika and contributes to an understanding of South Africa's cultural heritage. It is for this reason that the site, together with the social history associated with it deserves special protection.
